The first charge was the "Culpable destruction of an armed steamer of the Confederate States Navy;" the second, "Negligence;" and the third, "Improvident conduct." The Court, having maturely considered the evidence adduced, came to the conclusion that the several specifications were not proved, and found that the accused was "not guilty" of either charge. We append an extract from the proceedings in the case: The Court de further find that the accused had, while in command of the Virginia, and previous to the evacuation of Norfolk, thrown down the gap of battle to the enemy lade in Hampson Roade, and that the enemy had declined to take in up; that the day before Norfolk was evacuated a consultation, at the instance of the Secretary of the Navy, was held by a joint commission of army and navy officers, as to the best disposition to be made of the ship; that the secured was in favor of passing Fortress Monroe and taking the ship into York River, or of running down before Savannah with her, that in this he was overmided by the council, whe adviced that she should remain our mide by the council, whe adviced that she should remain our mide by the council, whe adviced that she should remain our mide by the council, whe adviced that she should remain our third by the council of the protection of Norfolk and Richmond, and that, in accordance with this advice, he proceeded to regulate her movements; that after the execustion of Norfolk and hishmond, and that, in accordance with this solvies, he proceeded to regulate her movements; that after the execustion of Norfolk and hishmond, her dark should be reduced to its officency of the proceeded to regulate her movements; that after the execusion of Norfolk and hishmond for the town of the town of the two months of the point were virtually given up to the uneasy; that the ship being those out of fro

There is no atrocity of modern times comparable to the Yankee policy of deporting and imprisoning the whole population of a country. Russia fell short of it in her savage reprisal on Poland. Cornwallis did something of the kind in South Carolina. There have been at least fifty histories of that period written by Yankoes, and in every one of them Cornwallis is demounced as a mouster of cruelty for this very thing. All of their books and Fourth of July orations are to the same tune. Yet here they are, following in his footsteps, after cursing and reviling him, at least once a year, for the last 80 years. In the Congress of the Old Confederation, after the surrender of Cornwallis, a member from South Carolina proposed to treat him as a man who had set the law of nations at defiance by the very act under consideration. And here are the righteous Yankees taking him for their model.
